SEN: SEN support but no specialist assessment of type of need

EHCP REPORT #105

Section A:

[Student Name] is a 10-year-old female who enjoys creative writing, drawing, and playing with her pet cat. She aspires to be an illustrator when she grows up. She expresses that she finds the classroom environment "too loud" and sometimes feels overwhelmed during unstructured playtimes. Her parents describe her as a thoughtful and imaginative child who thrives when she has a clear routine and feels understood by her teachers.

Section B:

[Student Name] has identified needs related to Autism Spectrum Disorder (ASD). She experiences significant difficulties with social communication, specifically in interpreting non-verbal cues and initiating peer interactions. She demonstrates sensory processing sensitivities, particularly to auditory stimuli, which impact her ability to focus in a busy classroom. She requires support to manage transitions and regulate her emotional responses when faced with unexpected changes to her schedule.

Section C:

There are no specific medical health needs identified at this time. [Student Name] is in good physical health.

Section D:

There are no specific social care needs identified at this time. [Student Name] is supported by her family and does not require statutory social care intervention.

Section E:

1. By the end of Year 6, [Student Name] will independently use a "calm-down" strategy when feeling overwhelmed.
2. [Student Name] will initiate a conversation with a peer during a structured activity at least twice a week.
3. [Student Name] will follow a visual schedule to transition between tasks with minimal adult prompting.

Section F:

- Access to a quiet, low-arousal workstation within the classroom.
- Use of noise-canceling headphones during independent work or high-sensory periods.
- A visual timetable provided daily to outline the structure of the school day.
- Small group social skills intervention (e.g., Lego Therapy or social stories) delivered weekly by a Teaching Assistant.
- Pre-teaching of new vocabulary and concepts prior to whole-class lessons to reduce anxiety.

Section G:

None required.
